PREFACE

The Government Museum has a small gallery devoted to Jainism. Though the gallery is small it has an impressive collection from Tamil Nadu, Andhrapradesh and Karnataka. I felt that there is a need to write a small book on Jain Art in the collection of the Chennai Government Museum. In the preparation of this book, I have gathered materials from the books written by Great Stalwarts like T.N. Ramachandran, C. Sivaramamurti and others. I take this opportunity to thank the Commissioner of Museums for the constant encouragement I received from him. I would like to express my gratitude to the Deputy Director of Museums for his support in bringing out this book. I express my sincere heartfelt thanks to Dr. V.N. Srinivasa Desikan and Dr. N. Sankaranarayana, my predecessors in this section who encouraged me in my work.

I thank Thiru J. R. Asokan, Curator, Design and Display, Thiru K. Rajendran, D.T.P. Operator and Thiru B. Shankar, xerox operator for excutiing the present work. My thanks are due to my sectional staff and staff of the Printing section.

INTRODUCTION

Jainism is one of the religions of India which has firm roots in South India. It represents an important branch of the Sramana tradition of Ancient India. According to a tradion, Mauryan Emperor Chandra Gupta had come to South India towards the end of his life along with his Guru Bhadrabahu some time 197 B.C. It was due to the great patronage given to Jainism by Pallavas of Kanchi and the Pandyas of Madurai, the religion flourished in Tamil Nadu and vestiges of which are seen in the form of sculptures. Besides Tamil Nadu, Andhra and Karnataka were also great centres of Jainism. Mahendra Verman I of the Pallava dynasty and Kun Pandiyan of Pandya dynasty were responsible for the strong roots of Jainism in South India. The most ancient vestiges of Jain religion in South India are of about 2nd Century B.C. and are mostly natural caverns. These caverns are situated in Tamil Nadu at Ramanathapuram, Tiruchirapalli, Tirunelveli etc., Apart of these natural caverns, there are several improvised rock cut beds for the monks with raised pillow like structure for resting their heads. Some of these rock cut beds contain early Brahmi inscriptions, as for instance the famous inscription in Brahmi at Sittannavasal. These Inscriptions in Brahmi are important for the study of South Indian inscriptions, Mahendravarman-I was a Jain before his conversion to Saivism by Tirunavukkarasar. The rock carvings of Tirakkal in North Arcot District and those in the cave at Armamalai are of Pallava workmanship. The sculptural art of Sittannavasal cave is of early Pallava Period (Mahendravarman). The massive and stiff nature of these sculptures indicate the beginning of the sculptural art. Early Jaina carvings were found at Chittipatti. Tirumalai in North Arcot District has interesting rock cut carvings, which according to C. Sivaramamurti can be placed to the times of later than the transitional period, the tenth century. Here there are inscriptions of Chola Parantaka-I. C. Sivaramamurti drew parallels between the Jain architecture and the Hindu architecture of the conteporary period and was of the opinion that Jain architecture followed the Hindu architecture and he sites carvings of Sittannavasal in the earliest period and also the examples at Tirumalai and Tiruparuttikundram for the later period.

JAINA ICONOGRAPHY

Jainism is accused of being atheistic but however it is not so. The numerous gods such as Tirthankaras, Yakshas, yakshis, Indras, that fill the Jaina Pantheon speak for its belief in godhood. But their gods are not creators of the universe. According to them the world is infinite and was never created at any time. If the theory of creation is accepted that will give rise to the theories of more complicated nature such as causation which may ultimately point to imperfection. Jainism attempts to raise man to godhood by "steady faith, right perception, perfect knowledge, and above all spotless life".

As in Hinduism, so also in Jainism, the gods and goddesses are classified into orders; they are mostly mortals and are distinguished by the lanchanas-cognisances. The most prominent among them are the 24 Tirthankaras or the perfected teachers.

Every Jain has to pray and bow many times everday with the following invocations-

> "Om Namo Arahantanam namo siddhanam namo ayariyanam > Namo uvajjhayanam namo loye sabba sahunam".

"Salutations to the arhats, to the siddhas, to the acharyas, to the upadhyayas and to all the sadhus of the world". These five arhats, acharyas, siddhas, upadhyayas and sadhus are five supreme ones. The Om (aum) in the mantra stands for the five supreme ones-a,a,a, u and m; a stands for arhats, a stands for acharyas, a stands for asarira "disembodied" - siddhas, u stands for upadhyayas and m stands for muni i.e. saint or a sadhu. Images and sculptures containing the figure of these five supreme ones can be seen in any jain temple. Images of the 24 Tirthankaras are usually placed on highly sculptured asanas. Tirthankara images are generally found in two attitude-sitting and standing. Twenty one Tirthankaras are said to have attained nirvana in the Kayotsarga attitude i.e. standing erect as Bahubali at Sravana Belgola, while the other three did so while seated on a Padmasana. Rishabhadeva, Neminatha and Mahavira are the three who are considered to be the most important of all. Some scholars believe that Rishabhadeva is mentioned in the vedic texts, Vishnu Purana and Bhaghavata Purana.

Seated images of Tirthankaras always have the legs crossed in front, the toes of the foot resting close upon the knee of the other, the right and left hands are placed over them with the palms facing upwards. All are so alike inthis posture and hence the need felt to differentiate them by certain devices which are known as chinnhas are lanchanas. Chennai Government Museum has the Digambara images only in its collection.

LIST OF TIRTHANKARAS WITH THEIR EMBLEMS

1. Rishabhadeva	-	bull
2. Ajithanatha	-	elephant
3. Sambhavanatha	-	horse
4. Sumatinatha	-	a wheel, circle or curlew
5. Abhinandana	-	monkey
6. Padmaprabha	-	a red lotus
7. Suparsvanatha	-	a Svastika on the throne and the hood of a five headed cobra above.
8. Chandraprabha	-	crescent moon
9. Pushpadanta	-	makara or crab
10. Sitalanatha	-	wish-yielding tree
11. Sreyamsanatha	-	a deer-rhinoccrous or garuda
12. Vasupujya	-	a buffalo or bullock
13. Vimalanatha	-	a boar
14. Ananthanatha	-	a bear
15. Dharmanatha	-	a thunder bolt
16. Santinatha	-	a deer
17. Aranatha	-	a fish
18. Kunthunatha	-	a goat
19. Malinatha	-	a water pot or jar
20. Munisuvrata	-	a tortoise
21. Naminatha	-	a blue water lily
22. Neminatha	-	a conch
23. Parsvanatha	-	a snake on the throne and the hood of the seven headed cobra above.
24. Mahavira	-	a lion.

The cream of Government Museum's collection includes Padmaprabha, Pushpadanta and Suparsvanatha. But most of the representation are of Tirthankaras. Among the whole group, the sculptures acquired from Danavulapadu in the Cuddappah District are interesting. They include a set of early sculptures datable to 9th - 10th Century A.D. A huge Parsvanatha standing unfortunately mutilated beyond the knees is one among them. The size of this image is awe-inspiring. Also seated Yakshi, two chaumukhs (Four faces) and an inscribed pillar with three panels of sculptures with Mahavira seated at the top and a worshiper at the middle portion. The other set belongs to a later period which are mainly tombstones or Nishidikas. Besides these there is a bas-relief of Mahavira seated, flanked by Yakshas which was obtained from Deviagaram, is datable to the Pallava period. On the other side of the hall there is one sculpture of Ajithanatha, the second Tirthankara seated on a high simhasana in the usual pose with chaurle-bearers. The hair on the scalp is done in curly form. The Mukkodai or tripple umbrellas is present over his head. This image is obtained from Peddatumbalam, Bellary district. Then the sculpture of Padmaprabha and Suparsvanatha which are datable to the 10th Century A.D. also from Peddatumbalam.

Next ones come from Mysore State. These are inscribed in Kannada script. They are made of black granites and are polished well.

Then comes the seated huge Tirthankara from Tuticorin. This is an outstanding piece not only because of its size but also of its provenance. It show that Jainism was prevalent in Pandyan country. It has suffered a lot due to the revages of time and climate. Patches are seen in the chest, knee and other places. The face is not clear.

Next a set of Inscribed Pillars from Dharmapuri, Salem District are displayed. They are important because they bear the inscription of Nolamba Pallava King Mahendradiraja on all the four sides in old Kannada script datable to 9th Century A.D. The pillar is cubical and has lotus petals turned downwards carved at the top with a Kalasa over it all.

Then a set Mahaviras from various places are displayed. These sculptures are as a rule are stiff and very little variety is met with in the representation of the themes. Hence there is no scope for displaying the capacity of the sculpture because the subjects dealt with are mostly Tirthankaras either seated or standing.
